Nancy Krieger is a Professor of Social Epidemiology at the Harvard T.H. Chan School of Public Health.

Dr. Krieger will offer a framing of health inequities in their current and historical context, and, drawing on the ecosocial theory of disease distribution, articulate why we would do well to conceptualize health inequities as embodied history.

Dr. Krieger is an internationally recognized social epidemiologist with a background in biochemistry, philosophy of science, and history of public health, plus 30+ years of activism involving social justice, science, and health.
